Will your homeowners be ready for the SPRING THAW?

Hello [REDACTED],

The winter season has been exceptionally harsh this year – record rainfall, snowfall and sub-zero wind chills. As a result, our water and sewer lines are at an increased risk of failure. This is a good time to think about helping your community save on service line repair costs that normally range from $1,500 to $3,500. Many homeowners don't realize that service line repairs are not covered by a homeowner's policy. Some are of the impression that the city will take care of the repair.

Many cities across the country have afforded their residents increased peace of mind by introducing the National League of Cities (NLC) Service Line Warranty Program, which provides generous service line repair coverage for only a few dollars a month. More than 140,000 homeowners across the country have saved over $90 million in service line repair costs with the NLC Service Line Warranty Program.
